Nails and Iron are taken to Cinerman and Louisville at 3 a 10c per 100 lbs. and other kinds of freight in proportion.—Very different has been the fortune of the transport. Very different has been the fortune of the transporters on the Canal; if they have not lost, they cerainly have made very little this season. The receipts of produce from below have fallen off considerably, as is to be expected from the early opening of the Rivers and Canal. The receipts of toll on the Canal value a gratifying increase over 1343 and this is made an objection to the sale of the public works. Says a country paper, "Will the people consent to sail the hear that is laying such goldeneggs!" This would be a powerful objection if the Very different has been the fortune of the egs?" Although Cincinnati is now the great pork market, Louisville shows in each year's business an in-

In the winter of '42-'43 there were slaughtered here about 55,000 hogs, and during the last winter about 65,000, exhibiting an increase of near one hundred per cent, whist at Cincinnati there was no increase over the preceding Cincinnati there was no increase over the preceding year. But we want more buyers of hogs than we mave had. It is a matter of astonishment to us that Eastern operators coming. West should all settle slown at Cincinnan, and thus, instead of going to where the hogs are, endeaver to concentrate them at one point from a space of several hundred unites, at an enhanced price of course. No where in the Union can there hogs be found than here—no where more skifful packers or extensive packing-houses. At the sambishment of A. S. And, owing to the causes effore mentionad, hogs have been lower here than at Cincinnati. Why, then, do not your Eastern buyers more generally visit us? If they will look at the amp they will see that no place in the West has a finer position for concentrating hogs than Louisvitte—here more convenient to the log-raising portion of Kentucky than Cincinnati, and it is well known that "Kontucky hogs" stand hogher than any others.
